AUSTRALIAN FAMILY PROVISION LAW

Englefield

Australian Family Provision Law is a current and fresh analysis of family provision law around Australia. It deals with one of the most highly litigated areas of succession law, one which continues to be characterized by state differences, despite the movement towards uniformity.

Increasingly, practitioners may be called on to advise on family provision claims outside their own jurisdictions. They will be aware that the legislation in each other jurisdiction varies from their own, often in subtle and unexpected ways. At the same time, superannuation death benefit disputes could give rise to parallel actions on different principles before different tribunals. These factors, combined with case law that is characterized by judicial discretion and decisions which are fact-specific, make for a challenging area of practice.

Drawing on her background in trusts, superannuation law and deceased estates practice, author Leonie Englefield of the Victorian Bar, covers the general principles, as well as cross-jurisdictional issues and provides a specific chapter dealing with superannuation death benefits.

Practical features to assist readers include: detailed tables of contents, cases and statutes as well as an essentials checklists for standard applications, client intake forms, court practice notes, relevant legislation and index.

Australian Family Provision Law is a useful and convenient volume for succession law practitioners, family provision mediators, and financial and estate planners as well as trustees and other advisors who find themselves involved in family provision matters. This book provides both a practical and comprehensive coverage of the relevant law.

BUSINESS GUIDE TO COMPETITION LAW
MANAGING YOUR RISKS

ATMD Bird & Bird LLP

The Competition Act 2004 has significantly changed the business landscape in Singapore. The Act which came into force on January 1, 2006 was introduced in order to create a level playing field for businesses big and small to compete on an equal footing. The objective of competition law is to promote the efficient functioning of our markets and enhance the competitiveness of the economy by reinforcing pro-enterprise and pro-competitive policies. The law seeks to prohibit anti-competitive activities that unduly prevent, restrict or distort competition.

This book, aimed at senior business people, in-house legal counsel, compliance personnel as well as practising lawyers aims to explain the application of the law in practical terms and help companies set up legally compliant practices.

It will answer questions such as what is the Competition Act about, what type of practices the law seeks to address, how it will change how someone does business and actions that need to be taken to ensure compliance. The book also looks at case law on this subject in the U.S.A. and U.K. and draws references on how key issues have been decided outside of Singapore.

A key feature of the book is the fact that well known U.K. economists who have significant expertise on the subject of competition law have been involved in the writing of the book. Other critical features of the book include practical coverage and application of law to everyday transactions and scenarios, procedural flowcharts, checklists of things to look out for avoid non compliance and FAQs on every chapter

Key contents include:

- Background to the introduction of the Competition Act as well as overview of the Act
- Definitions of the relevant market and assessment of market share
- Key prohibitions including Section 34, 47 and 54 prohibitions
- Competition and implications on Intellectual Property Rights
- Investigations and Enforcement
